STATE OFFICERS.

A majority, in fact nearly all of our exchanges that have expressed an opinion on the subject, favor a renomination of the present incumbents for another term. The argument is, that these gentleman have done well, and that they are honest, trustworthy officials; all of which we readily admit. They have attended to the duties of their respective offices, in honest, business-like manner, and that is precisely the reason they were elected. We fail to see, however, that this gives them any claim (more than any other capable citizen may have) for office. Professional office-holders are a class inconsistent with Democratic institutions, and we therefore think it imprudent to continue the same officials for many consecutive terms. It fosters the idea government the appearance of a ring, Mr. Randall has a boom too.
